Consider the following class definition: class Calc { public: //default constructor Calc(); //constructor takes in a number as parameter Calc(int num); //destructor ~Calc(); private: int m_num; }; Now, I want to create an object of this class and I want to assign a value of 5 to the member m_num, but it should not be a constructor. So, how can I do this? A: Use a setter method class Calc { public: //default constructor Calc(); //constructor takes in a number as parameter Calc(int num); //destructor ~Calc(); void setNum(int num); private: int m_num; }; That way you can do this: Calc calc(5); and m_num will be automatically set to 5 if you ever change it.
