Her political career has been in the doldrums since the Brexit referendum and not much has helped. From ex-house speaker Michael Martin's leaked remarks about her being a "not nice woman" to her fumbling miscalculation in going for a snap election, some of her latest performance has been just about embarrassing. She cannot even confirm her own government is getting support from the DUP in blocking a Brexit deal. But the real problems for the Prime Minister have come from elsewhere. The UK economy is totally and completely stuffed. Citi, HSBC, Banco de España, the ECB, Fitch, the Bank of England have all downgraded their forecasts for the UK economy over the next two years. Now, there are 11 firms in the FTSE 100 that have seen an outright collapse in profit. The only company that has seemed to be trading a profit in most of this period is Rolls-Royce. Even Rolls-Royce is now warning that it has to cancel a £1bn order for jet engines from Trenton to Airbus. In a year when we should be celebrating some of the strongest economic growth in over a century, we actually have the largest fall in output in more than 20 years. Pound sterling is flirting with a 20-year low against the dollar and we've had the most volatile exchange rate in the world in the last few years. We currently have the highest inflation in two decades, so even if you are taking into account the problems of the last week, the pound has been in free fall. The Chancellor has been sounding the alarm on this for months and yet his feeble response, an own goal warning against a potential no-deal Brexit, has been dismissed with indifference by the Brexiteers and many of those on the left. In a year when we should be celebrating some of the strongest economic growth in over a century, we actually have the largest fall in output in more than 20 years. We have a government with no plan to even start preparing for no deal. They don't even know when no deal is going to Adrenocortical stimulation and inhibition of gastric secretion in dogs]. 1. 0.3 microgram pancreastatin i.v., a biologically active peptide isolated from pancreatic extracts, induces significant increases in cortisol secretion (six to seven fold) and in corticosterone plasma levels (three to four fold) at 30 and 60 min after the injection. These effects could be prevented by administration of atropine before the peptide. Pancreastatin increases ACTH secretion without modifying blood calcium. 2. Pancreastatin stimulates the release of pancreatic enzymes, inducing a 2.5 fold increase in the output of glycaemia and in the outputs of acid and bicarbonate. This pancreatic response to the peptide is not prevented by administration of atropine before pancreastatin. These results suggest a trophic role of the peptide on the secretory functions of the exocrine pancreas and a non adrenolytic action of the peptide on the endocrine pancreas. 3. Pancreastatin inhibits gastric secretion induced by histamine (1 and 10 micrograms/kg i.v.) but does not modify the secretion induced by pentagastrin (0.1 and 0.2 micrograms/kg i.v.).Q:
